Maudsley Guidelines on HIV Psychiatry and Psychiatric Side Effects of HIV Medication

Individuals with HIV may present with a variety of symptoms, including psychiatric. These can include a variety of mental health presentations, which may be amenable to treatment. While initial treatment should aim to treat organic pathology, psychotropic medications may also be of utility. In some cases, psychiatric symptoms can be a result of anti-retroviral or other medical treatment. This talk will provide a general overview of the field of HIV psychiatry, including current recommendations for treating psychiatric presentations in individuals with HIV.
